In 1834, Philo Stewart designed a compact, wood-burning cast-iron stove: the Oberlin Stove. It was a metal kitchen stove small enough for domestic use, much more efficient than cooking in a fireplace, since it increased heating capacity and enabled record cooking times. It became a huge commercial success; it could be cast into decorative shapes and forms and could easily withstand temperature ...

Victorian kitchens – those before 1900 – mostly had not changed a great deal since Georgian times in the early 1800's. They had a fireplace or a 'range' (a built-in-to-the- chimney stove) for cooking, a dresser to keep china on, and a kitchen table for food preparation, at a back-breaking low height. Refrigeration was mostly non ...

Not only does it provide warmth, it offers another cooking option in addition to our standard electric range in the kitchen. For a number of years I've used the wood stove for simple cooking purposes. If I needed to melt butter for a recipe, I placed the butter in a metal bowl or pan and sat it on top of the wood stove to melt. If I wanted hot water for tea, I placed a teapot full of water ...
